Became highly skilled farmers and eventually will form the colony of Acadia

Quebec

advantages - towering cliffs provided an almost impregnable natural fort around 1615, the company made good $ from fur but France had little interest in building a settlement

Champlain even tried to stop ppl from coming to farm at the habitation b/c he thought this would ruin the trade or it might create trade outside his monopoly

Huron

closely related to Iroquois, but became enemies navigated rivers of central Canada, Champlain wanted to form an alliance with them and use Huron's trading connections = leading source of furs for the French had many economic advantages because of their geographic location, located on the southern shore of Georgian Bay (fishing was excellent)

1661, New France successfully asked for help from France, King Louis XIV and his minister Colbert determined to make the colony strong and profitable

France responded to the help by sending 1100 professional soldiers to Canada, led by Marquis de Tracy, they attacked & burned the Iroquois village until I begged for peace

Both parties got what they wanted - French would open fur trade to the west and the Iroquois could expand their territories elsewhere but Frontenac sending coureurs de bois to travel far seemed suspicious to the Iroquois 1682, recalled to France but was sent back several years later to lead his last campaign against the Iroquois

Siegeury

1663, 104 seigneuries divided into more than 13 million square arpents and spread over 320 kilometres on both sides of St. Lawrence river

The Quebec Act

1774, Quebec turned into a new British colony good for Canada & the French population, but caused major problems w/ the Americans the act recognized the importance of the Catholic Church, kept French law for business and personal law matters, introduced English Criminal Law, also made Quebec larger by setting its boundaries farther north and west the act was designed to keep the Canadians loyal to the Britain made things between American and Britain at the 13 colonies worse, Americans wanted to expand into Ohio valley, and wanted assemblies and more democracy (which the quebec didn't have) lead straight to American Revolution victories were paid by Britain's taxpayers, it seemed only right if Americans paid part of the bill too, Americans resisted, considered this as a great insult, cut off from the Ohio Valley from the RP and the Quebec Act but there were strong business ties between Britain and NA, potential loss of this relationship can trouble business ppl so 1774, they decided to work together the opening shot was fired at Lexington Green, Massachusetts an American might have fired the 1st shot out of excitement, and caused the British to fire at the Americans crowd protested and officers were poorly attacked, many politicians and English ppl stood with the Americans the act = disaster, taken back in 1766 almost 8000 went to the Maritime colonies, which resulted in the formation of a new colony, New Brunswick, 1784 arrival of so many english-speaking colonists made the Canadians very uncomfortable since the loyalists were against the French and didn't want to adjust to the French traditions so they demanded their own government in the west, Quebec split into 2 colonies, lower C to east and upper C to west
