It happens that sometimes a committee decides that some plans need to be modified to meet their criteria. The good thing as a teacher is that you have a "grid" or "anchor" among your teacher resources where you know how to shift lessons and plans. If you are good at this, as you can easily be with practice, then you can meet any challenge with ease.

So what sort of topics does Introduction To Lesson Plans suggest? This can vary by subject and by grade level. You will want to include an overall mission statement for the course, policies for disabled students, field trip plans, classroom discussions, homework assignments, lab work, class presentations, and other events such as school auditorium presentations.
