

What is Emotional Suppression?

Emotional Suppression means holding back or hiding your true feelings instead of expressing them. It's like putting a lid on your emotions so that they don't show on the outside.

Example - Imagine you had a really tough day at work. You're feeling angry and stressed, but instead of talking about it or showing how you feel, you pretend everything is fine. You keep a smile on your face and don't let anyone know you're upset. This is emotional suppression.

Signs Of Emotional Suppression

BEHAVIOURAL	PHYSICAL	SOCIAL	EMOTIONAL	PSYCHOLOGICAL
Avoiding intense emotion-provoking situations	Chronic muscle tension, headaches or other stress related physical symptoms	Choosing to spend time alone rather than with friends or family	Feeling emotionally numb or disconnected from own feelings	Symptoms of Depression like feeling of hopelessness, persistent sadness, loss of interest in activities
Becoming distant or detached from difficult situations; pulling away from close relations	Constant feeling of being drained or tired	Maintaining only surface level relations with others	Struggling to communicate how they really feel	Feeling anxious or stressed without a cause
Displaying anger and irritability instead of showing other emotions	Stress related illnesses like high bp and gastro issues	Having difficulty forming close, intimate relationships	Displaying only a narrow range of emotions, showing only neutral or slightly positive emotions	Diminished sense of self worth

Abusing Substances to numb or escape feelings

Immersing completely in work or hobbies to avoid dealing with emotions
