Definition

Rhetoric is the art of discourse, wherein a writer or speaker strives to inform, persuade or motivate particular audiences in specific situations.

Best known definition comes from Aristotle, who considers it a counterpart of both logic and politics, and calls it the faculty of observing in any given case the available means of persuasion great orators

Tailored his style to be very audience-specific. Not relying on attractive words but simple, effective prose. He used clauses to create patterns that would make seemingly complex sentences easy for the hearer to follow. His tendency to focus on delivery promoted him to use repetition, this would ingrain the importance into the audience's minds; he also relied on speed and delay to create suspense and interest among the audience when presenting to most important aspects of his speech. One of his most effective skills was his ability to strike a balance: his works were complex so that the audience would not be offended by any elementary language, but the most important parts were clear and easily understood

Great Orators (Roman & Middle Age)

Cicero 106-43 BC

The best known roman ancient orator and the only who both spoke in public and produced treatises on the subject. Learn not only about the specifics of their case (the hypothesis) but also about the general questions from which they derived (the theses). Gave rise to the idea that the "ideal orator" be well-versed in all branches of learning: an idea that was rendered as "liberal humanism," and that lives on today in liberal arts or general education requirements in colleges and universities around the world

Quintilian 35-100

Began his career as a pleader in the courts of law. Organizes rhetorical study through the stages of education that an aspiring orator would undergo

Erasmus 1466-1536

Had considerable influence on the teaching of rhetoric in the later 16th century

Juan Luis Vives 1492-1540

It is likely that many well-known English writers were exposed to the works of Erasmus and Vives

Francis Bacon 1561-1626

Contributed to the field in his writings

Thomas Hobbes 1588-1679

Promoted a simpler and more natural style that used figures of speech sparingly

Hugh Blair 1718 - 1800

Lectures on Rhetoric and Belles Lettres saw international success in various editions and translations

Great Orators (Modern Age)
Chaïm Perelman.	Move rhetoric from the periphery to the center of argumentation theory. Among their most influential concepts are "dissociation," "the universal audience," "quasi-logical argument," and "presence."
Kenneth Burke	He described rhetoric as "the use of language as a symbolic means of inducing cooperation in beings that by nature respond to symbols
Edwin Black	Alternative types of discourse
Marshall McLuhan	"The medium is the message" highlights the significance of the medium itself. Widely publicized in the 20th
I. A. Richards	Introduced the influential concepts tenor and vehicle to describe the components of a metaphor
The Groupe µ	This interdisciplinary team has contributed to the renovation of the elocutio in the context of poetics and modern linguistics
Stephen Toulmin	Models of argumentation have had great influence on modern rhetorical theory
Richard Vatz	Agent-focused perspective
Richard M. Weaver	He focused on the ethical implications of rhetoric
