Cheatography

Hollywood's Golden Age Cheat Sheet by RainyMoons (RainyMoons) via cheatography.com/153402/cs/44120/

| Intro | | The Stud | lio System (cont) | Iconic Genres & Films | |
|--|--|------------------------------------|--|---------------------------------|--|
| Definition of Hollyw- ood's | Hollywood's Golden Age is typically defined as the period between the late 1920s and the early 1960s, when the | | These studios controlled every aspect of the filmmaking process, from production to distribution, and maintained contracts with | Musicals | Musicals were a defining genre of the Golden Age, often featuring elaborate dance numbers and popular music |
| Golden Age | American film industry experi- enced unprecedented growth in both creativity and commercial success | Vertical Integr- ation | directors, writers, actors, and other personnel The major studios operated under a vertically integrated system, meaning they owned the production facilities, distribution channels, and theaters where films were shown This allowed studios to maximize | | "Singin' in the Rain" (1952) and "The Wizard of Oz" (1939) are iconic examples that showcased Hollywood's ability |
| | This era saw the establishment of the studio system, the emergence of iconic film stars, and the production of some of the most enduring and influe- | | | | to create vibrant and imagin- ative entertainment |
| | | | | Film Noir | Film noir, characterized by its dark, cynical themes, and stylistic elements such as shadowy lighting and morally ambiguous characters, became prominent in the 1940s and |
| Historical Context | ntial films in cinema history The Golden Age began with the advent of sound in film, marked | | profits and maintain tight control over the types of films produced and the talent involved | | |
| | by the release of "The Jazz Singer" in 1927 | The Big | The "Big Five" studios (MGM, Paramount, Warner Bros., 20th | | 1950s "Double Indemnity" (1944) and |
| | It coincided with the Great Depression, World War II, and the post-war boom, with Hollywood films providing | Five and the Little Three | Century Fox, and RKO) were fully vertically integrated and had the most influence over the industry | | "The Maltese Falcon" (1941) are classic examples that influenced the visual and narrative style of future films |
| | escapism, propaganda, and entertainment to a global audience | | The "Little Three" (Universal, Columbia, and United Artists) were smaller and did not own theater chains, but they still | Westerns | Westerns were another staple of Hollywood's Golden Age, often depicting the American frontier and themes of indivi- |
| The Studio | | | played significant roles in the industry | | dualism and justice |
| Overview of the Studio System | The studio system was a method of film production and distribution dominated by a small number of "major" studios, including MGM, | | | | "Stagecoach" (1939) and "Sha- ne" (1953) are landmark films that exemplify the genre's enduring popularity and influence |
| | Paramount, Warner Bros., 20th Century Fox, and RKO | | | Epics & Historical Dramas | Hollywood's Golden Age was also known for producing large-scale epics and historical dramas, often with lavish sets and huge casts |
| By RainyMoons (RainyMoons) | | Not published yet. | | Sponsored by Readable.com | |
| By run ymoono (run ymoono) ruor published yet. | | | openeored by readable.com | | |

cheatography.com/rainymoons/

Not published yet. Last updated 17th August, 2024. Page 1 of 3. Sponsored by Readable.com Measure your website readability! https://readable.com

Cheatography

Hollywood's Golden Age Cheat Sheet by RainyMoons (RainyMoons) via cheatography.com/153402/cs/44120/

| Iconic Genres & Films (cont) | | The Star System (cont) | | Technological & Artistic Innovations (cont) | |
|---|---|---|--|---|--|
| "Gone with the Wind" (1939) and "Ben-Hur" (1959) are examples of films that showcased Hollywood's ability to produce grand, sweeping | | This system helped to create a sense of glamour and mystique around Hollywood, with stars becoming icons of style and culture | | Films like "King Kong" (1933) and "The Ten Commandme- nts" (1956) demonstrated the growing sophistication of visual effects in Hollywood | |
| narratives Comedy was another popular genre, with screwball comedies like "It Happened One Night" (1934) and romantic comedies like "- Roman Holiday" (1953) winning both critical and | on Film | influence film production, with | Cinema- tography & Art Direction | The Golden Age is also noted for its innovative use of cinema- tography and art direction, with filmmakers experimenting with lighting, camera angles, and set design to enhance storytelling Directors like Alfred Hitchcock and Orson Welles pushed the | |
| commercial acclaim | | success Technological & Artistic Innovations | | boundaries of visual storytelling, with Welles' "Citizen Kane" (1941) being particularly | |
| The Golden Age saw the rise of the "star system," where actors and actresses were cultivated and promoted by studios to | Sound & Colour | The introduction of sound in the late 1920s revolutionized filmma- king, leading to the production of "talkies" and the decline of silent | | renowned for its innovative use of deep focus and non-linear narrative | |
| become major public figures Stars like Clark Gable, Marilyn Monroe, Humphrey Bogart, Bette Davis, and Katharine Hepburn became household names and were central to a | | films The development of Technicolor in the 1930s allowed for the production of vibrant, color films, with "The Wizard of Oz" and "Gone with the Wind" being | Hollywood Exporting American Culture | Influence on Global Cinema Hollywood films were widely exported during the Golden Age, becoming a major vehicle for spreading American culture and values around the world | |
| film's marketing and success Studios had significant control | | among the first major films to use this technology extensively | | The global popularity of Hollywood films helped | |
| | | Hollywood's Golden Age saw significant advancements in special effects, enabling filmmakers to create more elaborate and fantastical scenes | | establish the U.S. as a cultural superpower, with American movies influencing filmmaking styles and genres in other countries | |
| | "Gone with the Wind" (1939) and "Ben-Hur" (1959) are examples of films that showcased Hollywood's ability to produce grand, sweeping narratives Comedy was another popular genre, with screwball comedies like "It Happened One Night" (1934) and romantic comedies like "- Roman Holiday" (1953) winning both critical and commercial acclaim ystem The Golden Age saw the rise of the "star system," where actors and actresses were cultivated and promoted by studios to become major public figures Stars like Clark Gable, Marilyn Monroe, Humphrey Bogart, Bette Davis, and Katharine Hepburn became household names and were central to a film's marketing and success Studios had significant control over their contracted stars, managing their public images, determining the roles they would take, and sometimes even | "Gone with the Wind" (1939) and "Ben-Hur" (1959) are examples of films that showcased Hollywood's ability to produce grand, sweeping narratives Comedy was another popular genre, with screwball comedies like "It Happened One Night" (1934) and romantic comedies like "- Roman Holiday" (1953) winning both critical and commercial acclaim Technolo Sound & & Colour Stars like Clark Gable, Marilyn Monroe, Humphrey Bogart, Bette Davis, and Katharine Hepburn became household names and were central to a film's marketing and success Studios had significant control over their contracted stars, managing their public images, determining the roles they would take, and sometimes even | "Gone with the Wind" (1939) and "Ben-Hur" (1959) are examples of films that showcased Hollywood's ability to produce grand, sweeping narrativesThis system helped to create a sense of glamour and mystique around Hollywood, with stars becoming icons of style and cultureComedy was another popular genre, with screwball comedies like "It Happened One Night" (1934) and romantic comedies like ". Roman Holiday" (1953) winning both critical and commercial acclaimInfluence Stars had the power to on Film influence film production, with Production their involvement often determining a film's budget, genre, and tone. A major star could make or break a movie, and their popularity was a key factor in a studio's financial successystemTechnological & Artistic InnovationsThe Golden Age saw the rise of the "star system," where actors and actresses were cultivated and promoted by studios to become major public figuresSound the introduction of sound in the & Late 1920s revolutionized filmma- Colour king, leading to the production of "talkies" and the decline of silent filmsStars like Clark Gable, Marilyn Monroe, Humphrey Bogart, Bette Davis, and Katharine Hepburn became household names and were central to a film's marketing and successThe development of Technicolor in the 1930s allowed for the production of vibrant, color films, with "The Wizard of O2" and "Gone with the Wind" being among the first major films to use this technology extensivelySpecial film's marketing and successHollywood's Golden Age saw significant advancements in special effects, enabling filmmakers to create more | "Gone with the Wind" (1939) and "Ben-Hur" (1959) are examples of films that showcased Hollywood's ability to produce grand, sweeping narrativesThis system helped to create a sense of glamour and mystique around Hollywood, with stars becoming icons of style and cultureCinema- tography & Art DirectionComedy was another popular genre, with screwball comedies like "It Happened One Night" (1934) and romantic comedies like ". Roman Holiday" (1953) winning both critical and commercial acclaimInfluence stars had the power to influence film production, with Production their involvement often determining a film's budget, genre, and tone. A major star could make or break a movie, and their popularity was a key factor in a studio's financial successCinema- tography & Art DirectionYstemTechnological & Artistic InnovationsSound "the introduction of sound in the & late 1920s revolutionized filmma- colour king, leading to the production of "talkies" and the decline of silent filmsHollywoodStars like Clark Gable, Marilyn Monroe, Humphrey Bogart, Bette Davis, and Katharine Hepburn became household names and were central to a film's marketing and successThe development of Technicolor in the 1930s allowed for the production of vibrant, color films, with "The Wizard of O2" and "Gone with the Wind" being among the first major films to use this technology extensivelyEffects significant advancements in special effects, enabling filmmakers to create more | |

cheatography.com/rainymoons/

Not published yet. Last updated 17th August, 2024. Page 2 of 3.

Measure your website readability! https://readable.com

Cheatography

Hollywood's Golden Age Cheat Sheet by RainyMoons (RainyMoons) via cheatography.com/153402/cs/44120/

| Hollywood's Influence on Global Cinema | | End of the Golden Age (cont) | | End of the Golden Age (cont) | |
|---|--|---|--|---|--|
| (cont) Impact on Intern- ational Filmmakers | Hollywood's techniques and narratives were adopted and adapted by filmmakers around the world, leading to the development of new genres and movements in global cinema | | The 1948 Supreme Court case United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., also known as the "Par- amount Decision," forced studios to divest their theater chains, ending the vertical integration that had sustained the studio system | The end of the Golden Age gave way to the "New Hollywood" era, characterized by greater artistic freedom, the emergence of auteur directors, and the influence of counter-culture | |
| Post-War | Filmmakers like Federico Fellini, Akira Kurosawa, and Ingmar Bergman were influenced by Hollywood while also contributing to the evolution of cinema with their distinct styles | Rise of Indepe- ndent Filmmaking | As the studio system declined, independent filmmakers gained more prominence, leading to a more diverse and experi- mental approach to filmmaking | | |
| Influence | After World War II, Hollywood films played a key role in the cultural reconstruction of war- torn Europe, with American movies symbolizing modernity and progress The Marshall Plan even | | The 1960s saw the rise of directors like Stanley Kubrick and John Cassavetes, who pushed the boundaries of what films could be, both in terms of content and style | | |
| End of the G | included provisions for the promotion of American films in Europe as a way to counteract communist influence | End of the Golden Age | The Golden Age is generally considered to have ended in the 1960s, as the studio system crumbled, and Hollywood underwent signif- icant changes in response to social, political, and techno- | | |
| Challenges to the Studio System | The late 1940s and 1950s saw challenges to the studio system, including the rise of television, which provided a new form of entertainment | | logical shifts | | |

By RainyMoons (RainyMoons)

and began drawing audiences away from

Not published yet. Last updated 17th August, 2024. Page 3 of 3. Sponsored by Readable.com Measure your website readability! https://readable.com

cheatography.com/rainymoons/

cinemas