globalisation of western childhood (cont)

where children should be based in a nuclear family, schooled, be innocent, dependent and vulnerable with no economic role people are campaigning across the world to fit for this ideology of childhood sociologists now believe that in western ideology of childhood is spreading and becoming the norm

The conflict view

Conflict sociologists such as Marxist and Feminists oppose the March of Progress view

They argue that the view ignores class inequalities. How can childhood have improved when some children face disadvantages?

Due to inequalities, many children face risk and harm. For example, poor families are more likely to have children on the child protection register.

Gender differences exist within children. Girls are still expected to carry out traditional gender roles.

Within ethnicity, studies on Asian families found that Asian parents were more likely to be more strict towards their children.

The child liberationist view

Diana Gittin's uses the term age patriarchy to describe inequalities between adults and children

She argues that adults, particularly men, use power and control over children and oppress them

As a result, children 'act up' = rebelling and doing adult things like smoking and swearing

Critics argue that some control over children is justifiable to help safeguard them. Also laws are in place to stop the child from being oppressed

The new sociology of childhood view

This view opposes the idea of children passively being developed through socialisation and norms and values. They campaign for children's rights and priorities

It sees children as active agents of their upbringing- children help to create their own childhood

Carol smart looked at divorce and found that children were involved in that process. It was not just about the parents, children were also emotionally involving themselves the to make the situation better

March of progress view

This whole theory is based on the idea that childhood has improved over time

Children today are more valued, better cared for, protected and educated

As a result, families are now more child centred. Parents invest emotionally and financially into children

It has been estimated that by the time a child turns 21 years old, they're parents will have spent roughly over £230,000 on them!!!

Laws and politics help to protect children from harm
