

1st Paragraph

1st Line The poet says he can't stop himself from praising and talking about his god, Ram.

Line

2st Line The poet says that god is sandalwood and that he (devotee) is water, when sandalwood falls in water, the fragrance spreads everywhere just like how god's name fulfills him.

3st Line That poet says that god is a cloud which is about to rain and that he (devotee) is a peacock, when a peacock sees dark clouds, it can't control itself and will start dancing, just like how a chakora always stares at the moon and longs for it.

4st Line The poet says that god is a lamp and he (devotee) is a wick, through which it illuminates the dark like day.

Line

5st Line That poet says that god is pearl necklace and he (devotee) is the thread, like polish on gold which will increase its shine.

Line

6st Line The poet says that god is a master and he (devotee) is a servant and he is willing to serve god forever. This is the devotion of Raidasa

Line

Chakora is a mythical bird in Hinduism that feeds on sunlight.

2nd Paragraph

The second paragraph describes the Lord's immense generosity, mercy, and equanimous nature. He put an umbrella over the poet like a king and the poet feels immense happiness from it. Raidas says that the Lord has readily adopted the devotees of lower castes like Namdev, Kabir, Trilochan, Sadhna, and Sainu and given them a respectable place in the world. God has never discriminated against anyone. In the second verse, the poet has called God merciful to the poor and downtrodden. Raidas has called his master as Gusaiya (Boss, God) and Garib Nivaju (savior of the poor). He asks the saints to listen, telling them that nothing is unusual for God..

This is a very short summary that doesn't cover all of it.

Some references.

You can find some much more in-depth explanations on the internet. This is one that is line-by-line.
